Traveling Photos

I love to travel. I try to go at least once a year to a different place. I like to explore different places, different cultures and talk to local people about many things.

I always find something new and interesting in every place. I wish I can afford and have the time to go to different places (even small villages) and take videos with local stories , recipes and visiting small business exploring the obstacles they have been trough and the success they have achieved.

I love to take pictures of things that normally other people would not even look at but I find beauty in even small and unusual things.

I think I can use some of them in a projects - use some elements of them, maybe a background or for creating a mood board or collage.

A photograph of a waterfall cascading down a rocky cliff face. The water is a bright white spray at the bottom, transitioning to a deep blue-grey as it falls. The cliff face is made of light-colored rock with dark, jagged edges. The background is a bright, overexposed sky.

Permit me to repeat some that I wrote yesterday, and then I will add a few more that I have just thought of. They are not in any order, but I will try to make them as clear as possible. I will begin with the first one.

These three words are the most powerful words in the English language.

MUSEUM

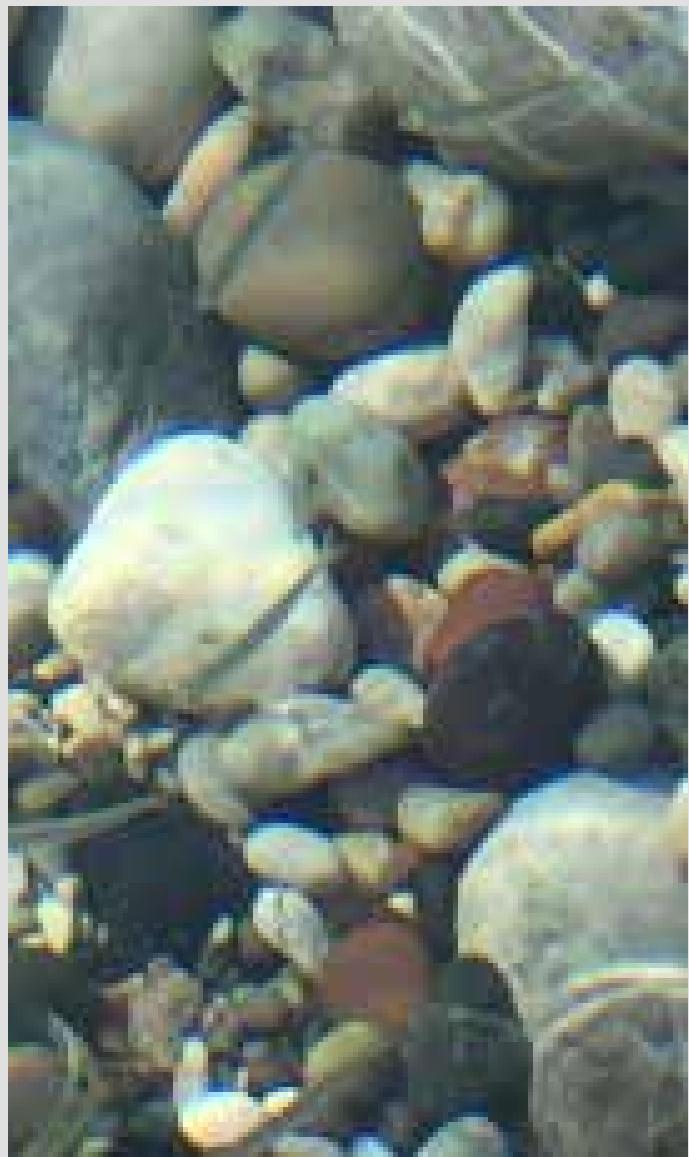

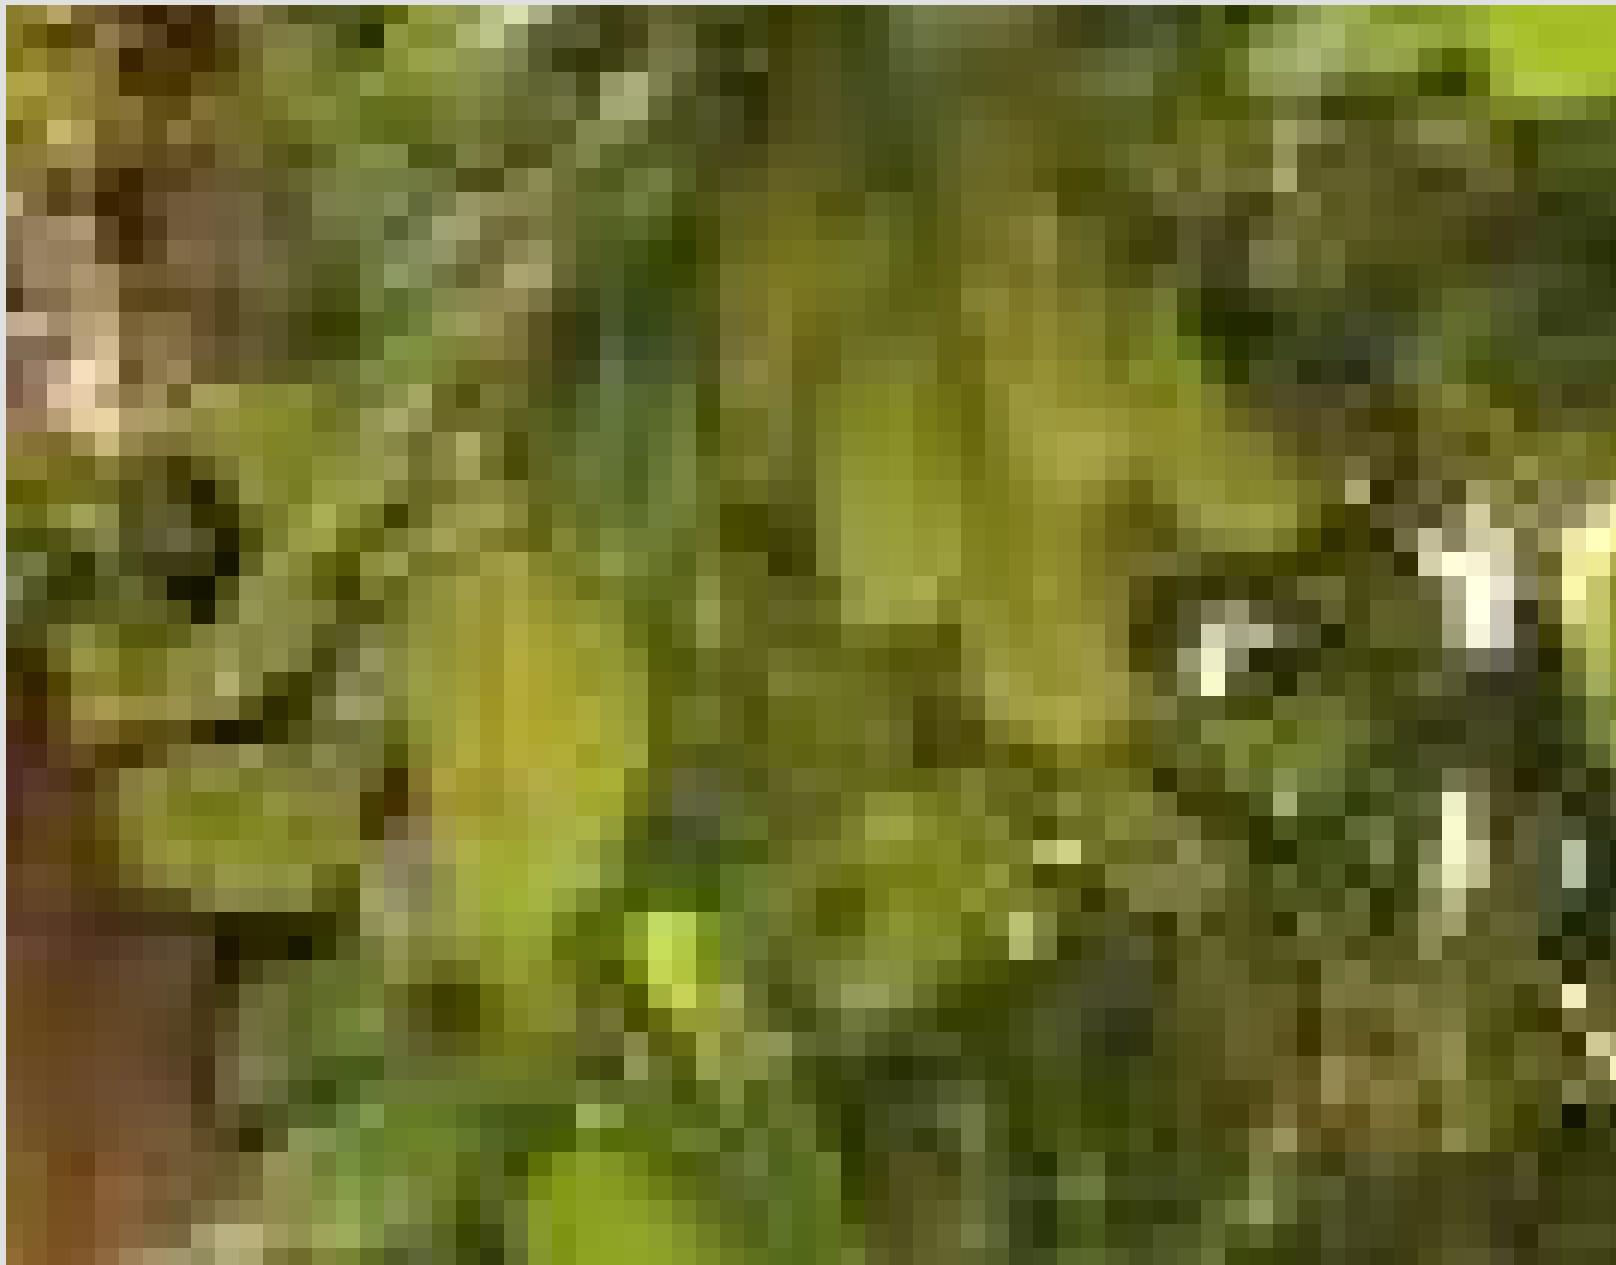

I was admiring the nice album covers from years ago

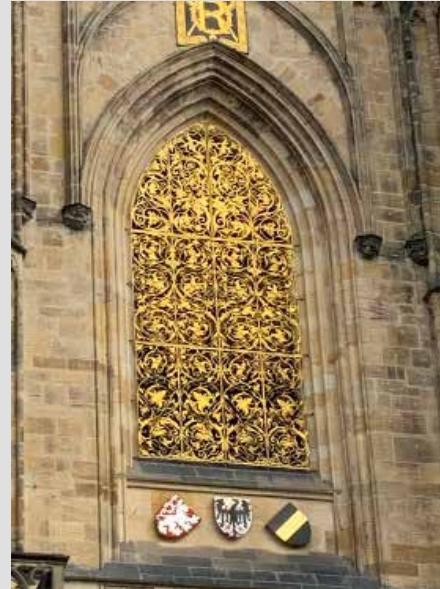

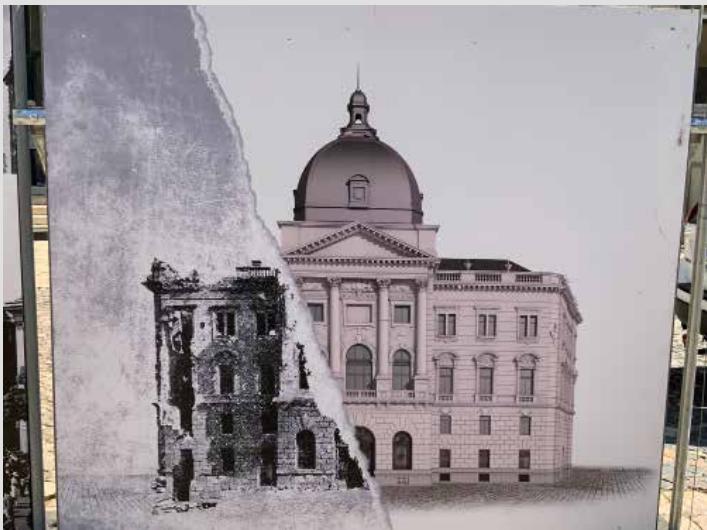

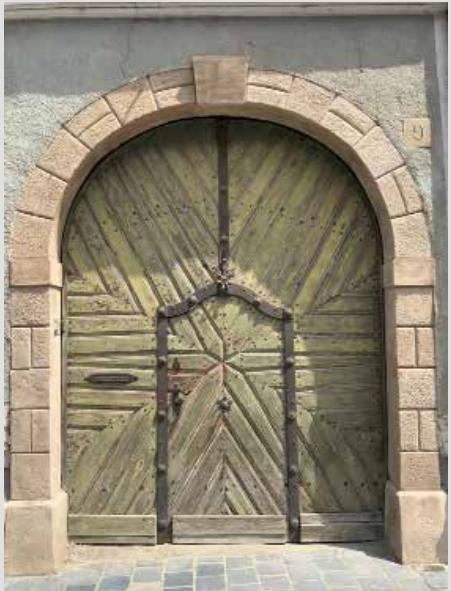

With Image trace in Illustrator you can extract these shapes and create amazing images.

The images that I see in churches are perfect example for good storytelling.

Perfect example for transformation from old to new, from the past to the present.

Example for repetition.

Images like this you can use it as background for projects.

In the local gift shops you can find such an amazing combination of colors.
